An array is created and every index of it holds information in a variable that is dynamically updated throughout the process.
A function populates the DOM with the appropriate HTML elements. The gallery card element uses the information stored in the array indexes to create a gallery card.
The function is then looped so that as many gallery cards are populated as there are indexes in the array